This factsheet summarises current research into the sexual health and wellbeing of people with learning disabilities living in Northern Ireland.

Key facts

- Compared to non-disabled peers, people with learning disabilities have a more limited and incomplete understanding of sexual health issues.
- Most carers acknowledge that people with learning disabilities have the right to sexual expression.
- Staff feel under pressure from managers and carers to supervise and limit the sexual expression of people with learning disabilities.

Introduction

In 2004, with funding from the Big Lottery Fund, FPA in Northern Ireland, in partnership with the School of Nursing at the University of Ulster, began a three year research project into the sexual health and wellbeing of people with learning disabilities living in Northern Ireland. The aim was to produce a profile of the feelings, attitudes and experiences of people with learning disabilities in relation to sex, sexuality and personal relationships; and to obtain comparable data from their carers, formal and informal.

Objectives

- To assess all the needs of women and men with learning disabilities in relation to positive sexual health, and to develop a tool to assist practitioners in this work.
- To assess how much relationships and sexuality education (RSE) people with learning disabilities receive, to highlight the sources of this education, and to find out what improvements they would like to see.
- To provide information about the attitudes of staff, teachers, family carers and health professionals toward the relationship and sexual health needs of people with learning disabilities in their care.
- To inform the further development of policy and guidelines relating to the relationship and sexual health needs of people with learning disabilities.

Over 500 people participated in the project by completing questionnaires, taking part in one to one interviews and attending focus groups. They included people with learning disabilities, family carers, front-line staff and professionals. The following summarises some of the main research findings and recommendations. These are presented in full in the research report entitled Out of the Shadows.¹

People with learning disabilities

In all, 62 people from the four Health and Social Services Board areas (now the Public Health Agency) participated in the research, of whom 32 were male, 30 were female and 39 were under 26 years of age. Using the format of a semi-structured interview, data was collected in three key areas:

- knowledge;
- personal experiences;
- values and attitudes.

The interviews lasted between one and two hours and, where possible, were carried out over two sessions. The main findings included the following:
• Many people with learning disabilities are able and willing to talk about sexual health but often have limited opportunities to do so. They reported limited experience of sexual expression and commented on the restrictions that carers and staff place on them. Some staff forbid them from having partners and think they should not be sexually active.
• They believe they should be free to decide whether or not to have intimate relationships or get married.

Family carers

Of all the carers who participated, 26 attended two focus groups, 63 completed a questionnaire and 22 took part in interviews. The main findings were as follows:
• The majority acknowledged that people with learning disabilities have the right to sexual expression, but only half of those who completed the questionnaire agreed that sex and sexual relationships are important in the lives of people with learning disabilities.
• Eighty six percent of those who completed the questionnaire were supportive of the right of people in their care to have a boyfriend/girlfriend.
• Most recognised the rights of people with learning disabilities to have relationships, but only 42% of those who completed the questionnaire agreed that homosexuality between mutually consenting partners is acceptable.
• All of those interviewed were critical of the lack of appropriate information and resources for carers to support them in educating the person in their care about sexuality and relationships.
• Those who supported the rights of people with learning disabilities to have relationships also emphasised the need for them to be protected and kept safe. They felt apprehensive about the person in their care forming relationships but all wanted them to be happy and to have the same experiences and rights as everyone else.
• The majority of carers who completed the questionnaire felt that service providers should have a policy on sexuality and relationships, and should consult them if the person with learning disabilities asked questions about sexual issues.
• The majority of carers who completed the questionnaire also felt that staff should stop sexual practices such as masturbating or sexual intercourse but not kissing or holding hands.

Front-line staff

• Compared to non-disabled peers, their understanding of sexual health issues appears more limited and incomplete. Many were confused about issues such as masturbation, pregnancy, contraception and sexually transmitted infections. Some were aware of these issues but did not know how to check the accuracy of what they had been told by their peers or had picked up from the media.

Five focus groups were held, involving 24 staff members from statutory and non-statutory organisations, and over 260 completed a questionnaire. The main findings were as follows:
• Staff felt under pressure from managers and carers to supervise and limit the sexual expression of people with learning disabilities. They appreciated that the consequences of this included lack of privacy and disrespect for the person with a learning disability, but felt they were powerless to do anything about it.
• They emphasised the need for clear policies and procedures on sexuality and relationships, policies that respect and respond to the person’s needs and wishes and more openly acknowledge issues of confidentiality.
Greater opportunities must be found for dialogue between staff, managers and carers so that possible misconceptions can be corrected and a culture of cooperation developed.

Recommendations

The recommendations were based on the following criteria:

- They could potentially make an immediate difference to the lives of people with a learning disability.
- They could be implemented through a change in practice rather than requiring extra resources. They would build on good practice that is already underway in Northern Ireland or elsewhere.
- They would command reasonable support across the different interest groups.
- They would be easily monitored so that progress in their implementation could be measured by agencies and advocacy groups.

They included the following:

- Teenagers and adults with learning disabilities should have access to information about sex, sexuality and relationships.
- Sexual health should feature in all person-centred planning and reviews.
- A nominated staff member should be available to respond to someone with learning disabilities who wants to know about or discuss personal matters.
- RSE initiatives in schools and day centers should include information and education on appropriate and inappropriate behaviours, and promote self-protection.
- Each Health and Social Care Trust should develop a training strategy that includes ongoing supervision and support.
- Carers should have additional support available to help them cope with the developing sexuality of the person in their care.
- Sexuality and relationships should feature in all training courses for professionals who are involved with people with learning disabilities.
- The importance of these issues to people with learning disabilities should be recognised at the highest level within Government.

Talking together… about growing up This is a workbook for parents of children with learning disabilities. It offers support to parents/carers of children with learning disabilities who are approaching or who are around the age of puberty. The easy to follow style is suitable for young people who may not be able to read. It will also help schools working in partnership with parents.

Talking together… about sex and relationships This is a practical resource for schools and parents who work with young people with learning disabilities. It uses illustrated stories and activities for use in the classroom to explore a range of situations that young people with learning disabilities face as they grow up. It also has pages for parents/carers so that home and school can work in partnership.
Talking together... about contraception This two book pack supports young people with learning disabilities who wish to access contraception. Book one contains a guide to the types of contraception available. Book two has been written for young people and has clear pictures, easy-to-read stories and picture posters.

Sexuality and learning disability: A resource for staff Based on FPA's highly successful learning disability courses, this book features a range of creative approaches to working with people with learning disabilities. Topics covered include: current law and policy; developing awareness and understanding; and skills and teaching. It also features examples of work that can be carried out with people with learning disabilities, and a list of useful resources.

All about us DVD-ROM This DVD-ROM aims to help the personal development and knowledge of people with learning disabilities around sex, sexuality and relationships. The resource provides a self-study learning tool that can be used by someone with learning disabilities on their own, or with support, to introduce key issues. It will complement the delivery of sex and relationships education in the home, school, and other learning environments. You can watch an online demo of All about us at www.fpa.org.uk.

All about us lesson plan manual Designed to accompany the award-winning All About Us DVD-ROM, this manual contains lesson plans covering growing up and personal and sexual relationships. Topics include emotions, understanding male and female bodies and public and private spaces. The manual is ideal for teachers but can also be used by parents and carers of people with learning disabilities.

Contraception: a guide for people with learning disabilities This guide to contraceptive choices has been designed to be accessible for adults with a range of learning disabilities. It covers a number of contraception methods, including condoms, the contraceptive pill, long-acting reversible contraception, emergency contraception and sterilisation. The guide explains in an easy to read format how each method works, how it is used, where it is available, its benefits and any potential disadvantages. It's designed to be used with the support of a family member/carer or a support worker. People with mild learning disabilities and/or with high functioning skills within the Autistic Spectrum Disorder (ASD) could use it independently but with support from family or carers to answer their questions. It can also be used as a sex and relationships education resource by teachers. The guide is for people with learning disabilities aged 16 years and over.

Sexually transmitted infections: a guide for people with learning disabilities This guide to sexually transmitted infections (STIs) has been designed to be accessible for adults with a range of learning disabilities. It explains in an easy to read format a range of STIs including symptoms and possible treatment. People with mild learning disabilities and/or with high functioning skills within the Autistic Spectrum Disorder (ASD) could use it independently but with support from family or carers to answer their questions. It can also be used as a sex and relationships education resource by teachers. The guide is for people with learning disabilities aged 16 years and over.
